PREFACE.

"Prefaces are great wastes of time, and though they seem to proceed of modesty, they are bravery." Francis Bacon.

THIS book is a collection of what is quotable, as well as of what is quoted. Passages have not been included unless they have either proved their right by actual and effective quotation, or have seemed likely to be of general acceptability and usefulness, as "words which come home to men's business and bosoms." The method of arrangement adopted will, it is hoped, commend itself to all lovers of literature as preferable to the plan, sometimes employed in similar compilations, of "classification" under "subject" headings. The best classification is a very ample index, and in this respect "A Book of Quotations" will be found to be most thoroughly supplied. Many excellent handbooks of proverbs, and also of classical and foreign quotations, have already been published, but none, as far as I am aware, with a full verbal index.

I have to acknowledge considerable indebtedness to the volumes of that useful repository of literary research, "Notes and Queries," not only in regard to tracing many English quotations, but also in the elucidation of the origin of many proverbs and household words, and notable passages from Greek, Latin, and modern languages. This collection is, however, in every section, the result of careful personal research and reference, extending over a period of more than fifteen years. Perfection is not possible in such a compilation, because absolute completeness is not attainable. At least—and at most—this volume can claim to be more elaborate and more comprehensive, as a book of reference, than any of its predecessors; and I venture to hope that, whilst its main purpose is utility, it may also justify the saying of Emerson, "Neither is a dictionary a bad book to read."

Medicine is a science which hath been, as we have said, more professed than laboured, and yet more laboured than advanced; the labour having been, in my judgment, rather in circle than in progression.

Proficience and Advancement of Learning. Book 2.

Words are but the current tokens or marks of popular notions of things. Ib.

The great sophism of all sophisms being equivocation or ambiguity of words and phrase.

1b.

Words, as a Tartar's bow, do shoot back upon the understanding of the wisest, and mightily entangle and pervert the judgment.

Words are the tokens current and accepted for conceits, as moneys are for values. Ib.

So hath he [man] sought to come forth of the second general curse, which was the confusion of tongues, by the art of grammar.

16.

A dance is a measured pace, as a verse is a measured speech. Ib.

There is no man but speaketh more honestly than he can do or think. Ib.

As Plato said elegantly, "That Virtue, if she could be seen, would move great love and affection." Ib.

As it hath been wisely noted, the most corrected copies are commonly the least correct.

1b.

It is one method to practise swimming with bladders, and another to practise dancing with heavy shoes.

1b.

In life there is no man's spirit so soft, but esteemeth the effecting of somewhat that he hath fixed in his desire, more than sensuality.

1b.

We are much beholden to Machiavel and others, that write what men do, and not what they ought to do.

1b.

Men must pursue things which are just in present, and leave the future to the Divine Providence

For as the ancient politicians in popular estates were wont to compare the people to the sea, and the orators to the winds; because as the sea would of itself be calm and quiet, if the winds did not move and trouble it, so the people would be peaceable and tractable, if the seditious orators did not set them in working and agitation.

1b.

Did not one of the fathers* in great indignation call poesy, vinum dæmonum? Ib.

All good moral philosophy, as was said, is but a handmaid to religion.

15.

By aspiring to a similitude of God in goodness, or love, neither man nor angel ever trangressed, or shall trangress.

1b.

States, as great engines, move slowly, and are not so soon put out of frame.

1b.

Man seeketh in society comfort, use, and protection.

1b.

Many are wise in their own ways, that are weak for government or counsel. Ib.

It is as hard and severe a thing to be a true politician as to be truly moral.

1b.

No man's fortune can be an end worthy of his being.

1b.

Liberty of speech inviteth and provoketh liberty to be used again, and so bringeth much to a man's knowledge.

1b.

Another precept of this knowledge is, by all possible endeavour, to frame the mind to be pliant and obedient to occasion. Ib.

Nothing is more politic than to make the wheels of our mind concentric and voluble with the wheels of fortune.

1b.

Surely the continual habit of dissimulation is but a weak and sluggish cunning, and not greatly politic.

1b.

Fortunes . . . come tumbling into some men's laps.

Ib.

That other principle of Lysander, "that children are to be deceived with comfits, and men with oaths."

1b.

It is in life, as it is in ways, the shortest way is commonly the foulest, and surely the fairer way is not much about.

1b.

Their discourses are as the stars, which give little light, because they are so high.

There are in nature certain fountains of justice, whence all civil laws are derived but as streams.

1b.

This writing seemeth to me... not much better than that noise or sound which musicians make while they are in tuning their instruments, which is nothing pleasant to hear, but yet is a cause why the music is sweeter afterwards.

1b.

The inseparable propriety of time, + which is ever more and more to disclose truth. Ib.

That ancient and patient request, "Verbera, sed audi." ("Strike, but hear"). Ib.

That which is imprinted upon the spirit of man by an inward instinct, according to the law of conscience, which is a sparkle of the purity of his first estate.

16.

Those which have not sufficiently learned out of Solomon, that "the causeless curse shall not come."

Ib.

Their law of keeping out strangers is a law of pusillanimity and fear.

New Atlantis.

God's first creature, which was light. Ib.

The reverence of a man's self is, next religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices. Ib.
The mind is the man.

Mr. Bacon in praise of Knowledge.

A man is but what he knoweth.

Is it not knowledge that doth alone clear the mind of all perturbations?

Is truth ever barren?

The industry of artificers maketh some small improvement of things invented; and chance sometimes in experimenting maketh us to stumble upon somewhat which is new; but all the disputation of the learned never brought to light one effect of nature before unknown.

10.

All this is but a web of the wit; it can work nothing.

1b.

They learn nothing there [at the universities of Europe] but to believe; first to believe that others know that which they know not; and after that themselves know that which they know not.

1b.

The sovereignty of man lieth hid in knowledge; wherein many things are reserved that kings with their treasure cannot buy, nor with their force command. 1b.

It is no less true in this human kingdom of knowledge, than in God's kingdom of heaven, that no man shall enter into it, "except he become first as a little child."

Valerius Terminus of the Interpretation of Nature. Chap. 1.

A religion that is jealous of the variety of learning, discourse, opinions, and sects, as misdoubting it may shake the foundations, or that cherisheth devotion upon simplicity and ignorance, as ascribing ordinary effects to the immediate working of God, is adverse to knowledge. Chap. 25.

Universities incline wits to sophistry and affectation. Chap. 26.

Envy, which is proud weakness, and deserveth to be despised.

Filum Labyrinthi.

In government change is suspected, though to the better. Ib.

What is truth, said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer.*

Essays (First series and edition, 1597).
1. Of Truth.

A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Ib.

One of the fathers, in great severity, called poesy, vinum dæmonum.

It is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in, and settleth in it, that doth the hurt.

Ib.

No pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth. † Ib.

It is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

Men fear death, as children fear toygo in the dark.

2. Of Death.

It is as natural to die, as to be born. Ib.

Above all, believe it, the sweetest canticle is "Nunc dimittis," when a man hath obtained worthy ends and expectations. Death hath his also; that it openeth the gate to good fame, and extinguisheth enyy.

All colours will agree in the dark.

3. Of Unity in Religion.

Revenge is a kind of wild justice.

4. Revenge.

A man that studieth revenge keeps his own wounds green.

Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New, which carrieth the greater benediction.

5. Of Adversity.

Virtue is like precious odours, most fragrant when they are incensed and crushed; for prosperity does best discover vice, but adversity doth best discover virtue.

It is good that a man's face gives his tongue leave to speak.

6. Of Simulation and Dissimulation.

Children sweeten labours; but they make misfortunes more bitter.

7. Of Parents and Children.

He that hath a wife and children, hath given hostages to fortune.

8. Of Marriage and Single Life.

^{*&}quot;Pilate asked, Quid est veritas? And then some other matter took him in the head, and so up he rose and went his way before he had his answer. He deserved never to find what truth was."—Bishop Andrewes, sermon, Of the Resurrection, 1613.

[†] Paraphrase of Lucretius. See Latin, "Sed nil dulcius est," etc.

There are some other, that account wife and children but as bills of charges.

nd children but as bills of charges.

Essays. 8. Of Marriage and Single Life.

Wives are young men's mistresses; companions for middle-age; and old men's nurses.

He was reputed one of the wise men that made answer to the question, when a man should marry? "A young man not yet; an elder man not at all."

1b.

The speaking in perpetual hyperbole is comely in nothing but in love. 10. Of Love.

The arch-flatterer, with whom all the petty flatterers have intelligence, is a man's self.

1b.

Men in great place are thrice servants.

Essays (Edition of 1612).
11. Of Great Place.

It is a strange desire, to seek power, and to lose liberty.

1b.

By pains men come to greater pains; . . and by indignities men come to dignities. Ib.

Happy, as it were, by report.

Set it down to thyself, as well to create good precedents, as to follow them.

1b.

Ask counsel of both times: of the ancient time what is best; and of the latter time what is fittest,

1b.

Severity breedeth fear, but roughness breedeth hate. Even reproofs from authority ought to be grave, and not taunting.

As in nature things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm.

16.

He said it that knew it best.

12. Of Boldness.

There is in human nature, generally, more of the fool than of the wise. Ib.

In civil business, what first?—Boldness. What second and third?—Boldness, And yet boldness is a child of ignorance and baseness.

Ib.

Boldness is an ill keeper of promise. 1b.

In charity there is no excess.

13. Of Goodness, and Goodness of Nature.

If a man be gracious and courteous to strangers, it shows he is a citizen of the world.

1b.

It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle or building, not in decay.

14. Of Nobility.

New nobility is but the act of power, but ancient nobility is the act of time.

1b.

Nobility of birth commonly abateth industry. 1b.

The four pillars of government, . . . religion, justice, counsel, and treasure.

15. Of Seditions and Troubles.

The surest way to prevent seditions, if the times do bear it, is to take away the matter of them.

1b.

Whatsoever is somewhere gotten is somewhere lost.

1b.

Money is like muck, not good except it be spread.

1b.

The remedy is worse than the disease. Ib. God never wrought miracle to convince atheism, because his ordinary works convince it.

16. Of Atheism.

A little philosophy inclineth man's mind to atheism; but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion.

16.

Atheism is rather in the lip than in the heart of man.

There is a superstition in avoiding superstition.

17. Of Superstition.

Let diaries therefore be brought in use.

18. Of Travel.

It is a miserable state of mind to have few things to desire, and many things to fear. 19. Of Empire.

Princes are like to heavenly bodies, which cause good or evil times; and which have much veneration, but no rest.

1b.

Books will speak plain, when counsellors blanch. 20. Of Counsel.

There is no secrecy comparable to celerity. 21. Of Delays.

There are some that can pack the cards, and yet cannot play well; so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. 22. Of Cunning.

I knew one that when he wrote a letter, he would put that which was most material in the postscript, as if it had been a byematter.

Ib.

Nothing doth more hurt in a state, than that cunning men pass for wise.

1b.

Be so true to thyself, as thou be not false to others. 23. Of Wisdom for a Man's Self.

It is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set a house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs.

1b.

It is the wisdom of the crocodiles, that shed tears when they would devour.

16.

He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator.

24. Of Innovation.

It were good, therefore, that men in their innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees scarce to be perceived.

1b.

I knew a wise man that had it for a byword, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion, "Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner."

Essays. 25. Of Despatch.

To choose time, is to save time.

The French are wiser than they seem, and the Spaniards seem wiser than they are.

26. Of Seeming Wise.

It had been hard for him that spake it to have put more truth and untruth together, in a few words, than in that speech: "Whosoever is delighted in solitude is either wild beast, or a god." 27. Of Friendship.

A crowd is not company, and faces are but a gallery of pictures.

1b.

No receipt openeth the heart but a true friend.

1b.

It redoubleth joys and cutteth griefs in halfs.

1b.

When all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight. Ib.

Cure the disease, and kill the patient. Ib. Riches are for spending. 28. Of Expense.

A man ought warily to begin charges, which once begun will continue. Ib.

Neither is money the sinews of war, as it is trivially said.

1b.

No people overcharged with tribute is fit for empire.

1b.

Thus much is certain; that he that commands the sea is at great liberty, and may take as much and as little of the war as he will

Age will not be defied.

30. Of Regiment of Health.

Suspicions, amongst thoughts, are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight.

31. Of Suspicion.

There is nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little. Ib.

Intermingle . . . jest with earnest.

32. Of Discourse.

He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others' memory.

1b.

Discretion of speech is more than eloquence. Ib.

Be not penny-wise; riches have wings, and sometimes they fly away of themselves, sometimes they must be set flying to bring in more.*

34. Of Riches.

[Dreams and predictions] ought to serve but for winter talk by the fireside.

35. Of Prophecies.

He that plots to be the only figure among ciphers, is the decay of a whole age.

36. Of Ambition.

Nature is often hidden, sometimes overcome, seldom extinguished.

38. Of Nature in Men.

A man's nature runs either to herbs or weeds. Ib.

They come home to men's business and bosoms.

Essays (Edition of 1625). Preface.

A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time. 42. Of Youth and Age.

Men of age object too much, consult too long, adventure too little, repent too soon.

Beauty is as summer fruits, which are easy to corrupt, and cannot last.

43. Of Beauty.

Houses are built to live in, and not to look on.

45. Of Building.

God Almighty first planted a garden: and indeed it is the purest of human pleasures.

46. Of Gardens.

It is generally better to deal by speech, than by letter. 47. Of Negotiating.

Costly followers are not to be liked; lest while a man maketh his train longer, he make his wings shorter.

48. Of Followers and Friends.

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals. Ib.

Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability.

50. Of Studies.

To spend too much time in studies is sloth.

1b.

Natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study.

1b.

Read not to contradict and confute; nor to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse; but to weigh and consider.

16.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested.

1b.

Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man. Ib.

Histories make men wise; poets, witty; the mathematics, subtile; natural philosophy, deep; moral, grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend.

10.

Light gains make heavy purses.

52. Of Ceremonies and Respects.

Small matters win great commendation. Ib.

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds.

1b.

^{*} See Prov. xxiii. 5.

He that is too much in anything, so that he giveth another occasion of satiety, maketh himself cheap.

Essays. 52. Of Ceremonies and Respects.

Fame is like a river, that beareth up things light and swoln, and drowns things weighty and solid.

1b. [See No. 10 (1597 ed.).]

It was prettily devised of Æsop: The fly sat upon the axle-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said, What a dust do I raise!

54. Of Vain-Glory.

The place of justice is a hallowed place.

56. Of Judicature.

The true religion is built upon the rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time.

58. Of Vicissitude of Things.

He is the fountain of honour. Of a King.
They serve to be recited upon occasion of

A name that keeps the name of this country respectable in every other.

1b.

Let those who have betrayed him [Lord Chatham] by their adulation, insult him with their malevolence. But what I do not presume to censure, I may have leave to fament.

16.

It did so happen, that persons had a single office divided between them, who had never spoke to each other in their lives, until they found themselves, they knew not how, pigging together, heads and points, in the same truckle-bed.

1b.

For even then, Sir, even before this splendid orb was entirely set, and whilst the western horizon was in a blaze with his descending glory, on the opposite quarter of the heavens arose another luminary, and, for his hour, became lord of the ascendant. Ib.

Great men are the guide-posts and land-marks in the State. Ib.

Passion for fame; a passion which is the instinct of all great souls.

15.

An illness (not, as was then given out, a political), but to my knowledge a very real illness.

1b.

To tax and to please, no more than to love and to be wise, is not given to men. Ib.

I have in general no very exalted opinion of the virtue of paper government.

Speech on Conciliation with America. (March 22, 1775.)

Refined policy ever has been the parent of confusion; and ever will be so, as long as the world endures.

1b.

The concessions of the weak are the concessions of fear.

1b.

Through a wise and salutary neglect [of the colonies], a generous nature has been suffered to take her own way to perfection; when I reflect upon these effects, when I see how profitable they have been to us, I feel all the pride of power sink, and all presumption in the wisdom of human contrivances melt and die away within me. My rigour relents. I pardon something to the spirit of liberty.

Abstract liberty, like other mere abstractions, is not to be found. Ib.

All Protestantism, even the most cold and passive, is a sort of dissent. But the religion most prevalent in our northern colonies is a refinement on the principle of resistance; it is the dissidence of dissent, and the Protestantism of the Protestant religion. Ib.

Obedience is what makes government, and not the names by which it is called.

1b.

The mysterious virtue of wax and parchment.

The march of the human mind is slow.

All government, indeed every human benefit and enjoyment, every virtue, and every prudent act, is founded on compromise and barter.

1b.

Slavery they can have anywhere. It is a weed that grows in every soil.

16.

Magnanimity in politics is not seldom the truest wisdom; and a great empire and little minds go ill together.

1b.

I know many have been taught to think, that moderation, in a case like this, is a sort of treason.

Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

Between craft and credulity, the voice of reason is stifled.

16.

If any ask me what a free government is, I answer, that, for any practical purpose, it is what the people think so.

1b.

Liberty, too, must be limited in order to be possessed. Ib.

Nothing in progression can rest on its original plan. We might as well think of accking a grown man in the cradle of an infant.

15.

Among a people generally corrupt, liberty cannot long exist.

1b.

England and Ireland may flourish together. The world is large enough for us both. Let it be our care not to make ourselves too little for it.

Letter to Samuel Span, Esq., of Bristol.

It is the interest of the commercial world that wealth should be found everywhere.

Corrupt influence, which is in itself the perennial spring of all prodigality, and of all disorder; which loads us, more than millions of debt; which takes away vigour from our arms, wisdom from our councils, and every shadow of authority and credit from the most venerable parts of our constitution.

Speech on the Economical Reform. (House of Commons, Feb. 11, 1780.)

They defend their errors as if they were defending their inheritance. Ib.

Gaming is a principle inherent in human nature. It belongs to us all. Ib.

Individuals pass like shadows; but the commonwealth is fixed and stable.

1b.

As wealth is power, so all power will infallibly draw wealth to itself by some means or other.

1b.

Ιb.

Kings are naturally lovers of low company.

Speech on the Economical Reform.

(House of Commons, Feb. 11, 1780.)

[Lord Suffolk] at last paid his tribute to the common treasury to which we all must be taxed.

1b.

Those things which are not practicable are not desirable. Ib.

The people are the masters.

Not a weathercock on the top of the edifice, exalted for my levity and versatility, and of no use but to indicate the shiftings of every fashionable gale.

Speech at Bristol (1780).

Whilst freedom is true to itself, everything becomes subject to it.

16.

Bad laws are the worst sort of tyranny.

In doing good, we are generally cold, and languid, and sluggish; and of all things afraid of being too much in the right. But the works of malice and injustice are quite in another style. They are finished with a bold, masterly hand.

1b.

This Siren song of ambition. 1b.

The worthy gentleman [Mr. Coombe], who has been snatched from us at the moment of the election, and in the middle of the contest, while his desires were as warm, and his hopes as eager as ours, has feelingly told us, what shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue.*

Speech at Bristol on Declining the Poll.

He has put to hazard his ease, his security, his interest, his power, even his darling popularity, for the benefit of a people whom he has never seen.

Speech on Mr. Fox's East-India Bill. (House of Commons, Dec. 1, 1783.)

Flattery corrupts both the receiver and giver; and adulation is not of more service to the people than to kings.

Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Politics and the pulpit are terms that have little agreement. No sound ought to be heard in the church but the healing voice of Christian charity.

10.

Surely the church is a place where one day's truce ought to be allowed to the dissensions and animosities of mankind. Ib.

It is not pleasant as compliment; it is not wholesome as instruction.

1b.

People will not look forward to posterity, who never look backward to their ancestors.

Th. Government is a contrivance of human wisdom to provide for human wants. Men have a right that these wants should be provided for by this wisdom.

1b.

But the age of chivalry is gone. That of sophisters, economists, and calculators, has succeeded; and the glory of Europe is extinguished for ever.

1b.

It is gone, that sensibility of principle, that chastity of honour, which felt a stain like a wound.

15.

Vice itself lost half its evil, by losing all its grossness.

Ib.

Kings will be tyrants from policy, when subjects are rebels from principle. Ib.

Learning will be cast into the mire, and trodden down under the hoofs of a swinish multitude.

15.

Because half a dozen grasshoppers under a fern make the field ring with their importunate chink, whilst thousands of great cattle, reposed beneath the shadow of the British oak, chew the cud and are silent, pray do not imagine that those who make the noise are the only inhabitants of the field; that, of course, they are many in number; or that, after all, they are other than the little, shrivelled, meagre, hopping, though loud and troublesome insects of the hour.

1b.

Man is by his constitution a religious animal.

A perfect democracy is therefore the most shameless thing in the world.

1b.

The men of England—the men, I mean, of light and leading in England.

1b

They were possessed with a spirit of proselytism in the most fanatical degree. Ib.

Nobility is a graceful ornament to the civil order. It is the Corinthian capital of polished society 15.

Superstition is the religion of feeble minds.

16.

Eloquence may exist without a proportionable degree of wisdom.

1b.

Difficulty is a severe instructor.

He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves, and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.

15.

Our patience will achieve more than our force. Ib.

Good order is the foundation of all good things.

The only infallible criterion of wisdom to vulgar judgments—success.

Letter to a Member of the National Assembly (1791).

Ιb.

Cromwell was a man in whom ambition had not wholly suppressed, but only suspended, the sentiments of religion.

10.

^{*} Orion is called by Homer a hunter of shadows, himself a shade. Od., 11, 572.

They who always labour can have no true judgment.

Letter to a Member of the National Assembly (1791).

These are amongst the effects of unremitted labour, when men exhaust their attention, burn out their candles, and are left in the dark.

10.

Angry friendship is sometimes as bad as calm enmity.

An Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

Every revolution contains in it something of evil. Ib.

The only liberty I mean, is a liberty connected with order; that not only exists along with order and virtue, but which cannot exist at all without them.

Speech at his arrival at Bristol. (Oct. 13, 1774.)

The silent touches of time.

Letter to Matthew Smith. (Describing Westminster Abbey.)

We an may run, God knows where, in chase of glory, over the boundless space of that wild heath, whose horizon always flies before us.

A Letter to Wm. Elliot, Esq. (May 26, 1795.)

The labouring people are only poor because they are numerous.

Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

To innovate is not to reform.

A Letter to a Noble Lord (1796).

These gentle historians, on the contrary, dip their pens in nothing but the milk of human kindness.

1b.

The king, and his faithful subjects, the Lords and Commons of this realm—the triple cord, which no man can break. Ib.

If we command our wealth, we shall be rich and free; if our wealth commands us, we are poor indeed.

Letters on a Regicide Peace.

Nothing is so rash as fear; and the counsels of pusillanimity very rarely put off, whilst they are always sure to aggravate, the evils from which they would fly.

No. 1 (1796).

Example is the school of mankind, and they will learn at no other.

1b.

Never, no never, did Nature say one thing, and Wisdom say another. No. 3 (1797).

Well is it known that ambition can creep as well as soar.

People crushed by law have no hopes but from power. If laws are their enemies, they will be enemies to laws; and those who have much to hope and nothing to lose will always be dangerous, more or less.

Letter to the Hon. C. J. Fox. (Oct. 8, 1777.)

We view the establishment of the English colonies on principles of liberty as that which is to render this kingdom venerable to future ages.

Address to the British Colonists in North America (1777).

The coquetry of public opinion, which has her caprices, and must have her way.

Letter to Thos. Burgh. (Dec., 1779.)

Laws, like houses, lean on one another.

Tracts on the Popery Laws.

Chap. 3, part 1.

In all forms of government the people is the true legislator.

1b.

There are two, and only two, foundations of law, . . . equity and utility. Ib.

Veneration of antiquity is congenial to the human mind. Chap. 3, part 2.

Nothing is so fatal to religion as indifference, which is, at least, half infidelity.

Letter to Wm. Smith.

(Jan. 29, 1795.)

Somebody has said that a king may make a nobleman, but he cannot make a gentleman.

1b.

The grand instructor, Time.

Letter to Sir H. Langrishe.

(May 26, 1795.)

You and I and everybody must now and then ply to the occasion, and take what can be got.

Ib.

A very great part of the mischiefs that vex the world arises from words. Letter to Richard Burke. (c. 1795.)

All titles terminate in prescription. Ib.

Dissent, not satisfied with toleration, is not conscience, but ambition.

Speech on the Acts of Uniformity.
(House of Commons, Feb., 1772.)

If it is not right to hurt, it is neither right nor wise to menace.

Speech on a Bill for the relief of Protestant Dissenters. (House of Commons, 1773.)

Toleration is good for all, or it is good for none.

They make it a principle of their irreligion outwardly to conform to any religion. Ib.

Old religious factions are volcanoes burnt out. Speech on the Petition of the Unitarians.

(House of Commons, May 11, 1792.)

Dangers by being despised grow great.

Early and provident fear is the mother of safety.

The greater the power the more dangerous the abuse. Speech on the motion on the Middlesex Election.

(House of Commons, Feb 7, 1771.)

Prescription is the most solid of all titles. Reform of Representation in the House of Commons. (Speech: May 7, 1782.)

The individual is foolish; the multitude, for the moment is foolish, when they act without deliberation; but the species is wise, and, when time is given to it, as a species it always acts right

The greatest inquest of the nation [the British House of Commons!

Impeachment of Warren Hastings. (Feb. 15, 1788.)

Crimes not against forms, but against those eternal laws of justice, which are our rule and our birthright.

The first step to empire is revolution, by which power is conferred, (Feb. 16, 1788.)

Law and arbitrary power are in eternal enmity.

Religious persecution may shield itself under the guise of a mistaken and overzealous piety. (Feb. 17, 1788.)

Modesty does not long survive innocence.

One that confounds good and evil is an enemy to the good.

Thank God, guilt was never a rational Ib.

There never was a bad man that had ability for good service.

All oppressors . . . attribute the frustration of their desires to the want of sufficient rigour. Then they redouble the efforts of their impotent cruelty.

A thing may look specious in theory, and yet be ruinous in practice; a thing may look evil in theory, and yet be in practice excellent. (Feb. 19, 1788.)

Infamy was never incurred for nothing (April 25, 1789.)

You read of but one wise man, and all that he knew was that he knew nothing. The Old Bachelor. Act 1, 1.

One of love's April fools.

I find we are growing serious, and then we are in great danger of being dull. + Act 2, 2.

Even silence may be eloquent in love. We never are but by ourselves betrayed.

Ăct 3, 1. Sharper: Thus grief still treads upon the heels of pleasure;

Married in haste, we may repent at leisure. Setter: Some by experience find those words misplaced;

At leisure married, they repent in haste.

ALEXANDER ROSS (1699-1784).

Wooed, and married, and a', Married and wooed and a'! And was she nae very weel off That was wooed, and married, and a'?

Song.

ROSSETTI CHRISTINA G. (1830-1894).

Their offers should not charm us, Their evil gifts would harm us. Goblin Market.

Their mother hearts beset with fears, Ιb. Their lives bound up in tender lives.

For there is no friend like a sister In calm or stormy weather; To cheer one on the tedious way, To fetch one if one goes astray, To lift one if one totters down, To strengthen whilst one stands.

She sang the tears into his eyes, The heart out of his breast.

Maiden-Song.

Ib.

Scanty goods have I to give, Scanty skill to woo; But I have a will to work,

Ιb. And a heart for you.

Sleep that no pain shall wake, Night that no morn shall break. Till joy shall overtake Her perfect peace.

Enrica.

Swift-footed to uphold the right And to uproot the wrong.

Noble Sisters.

And in his heart my heart is locked, And in his life my life.

Ib.

Remember me when I am gone away, Gone far away into the silent land.

Remember.

Better by far you should forget and smile. Than that you should remember and be sad. Ιb.

There is no music more for him, His lights are out, his feast is done: His bowl that sparkled at the brim Is drained, is broken, cannot hold.

A Peal of Bells.

Once it came into my heart, and whelmed me like a flood,

That these too are men and women, human flesh and blood;

Men with hearts and men with souls, though trodden down like mud.

A Royal Princess. St. 12.

Weep not, O friend, we should not weep: Our friend of friends lies full of rest;

No sorrow rankles in her breast, Fallen fast asleep.

She sleeps below,

She wakes and laughs above;

To-day, as she walked, let us walk in love;

To-morrow, follow so.

My Frienc

For what is knowledge duly weighed?
Knowledge is strong, but love is sweet;
Yea all the progress he had made
Was but to learn that all is small
Save love, for love is all in all.

JOHN RUSKIN (1819-1900).

The faculty of degrading God's works which man calls his "imagination."

Modern Painters. 1. Preface.

He is the greatest artist who has embodied, in the sum of his works, the greatest number of the greatest ideas.

1, Part 1, Sec. 1, Chap. 2, Sec. 9.

They are good furniture pictures, unworthy of praise, and undeserving of blame. 1, Part 11, Sec. 5, Chap. 1, Sec. 20.

They are the weakest-minded and the hardest-hearted men, that most love variety and change. 2, Part 2, Chap. 6, Sec. 7.

Vulgarity is only in concealment of truth, or affectation. 1b.

The higher a man stands, the more the word "vulgar" becomes unintelligible to him.

3, Part 4, Chap. 7, Sec. 9.

We English have many false ideas about reverence: we should be shocked, for instance, to see a market-woman come into church with a basket of eggs on her arm.

Chap. 10, Sec. 22.

To see clearly is poetry, prophecy, and religion,—all in one. Chap. 16, Sec. 28.

Going by railroad I do not consider as travelling at all; it is merely being "sent" to a place, and very little different from becoming a parcel. Chap. 17, Sec. 24.

Your railroad, when you come to understand it, is only a device for making the world smaller.

Sec. 35.

Pride is at the bottom of all great mistakes. 4, Part 5, Sec. 22.

False things may be imagined, and false things composed; but only truth can be invented.

5, Part 8, Chap. 4, Sec. 23.

Gentlemanliness, being another word for intense humanity.
5, Part 9, Chap. 7, Sec. 23.

That mysterious forest below London Bridge. Chap. 9, Sec. 7.

The purest and most thoughtful minds are those which love colour the most.

The Stones of Venice. 2, Chap. 5, Sec. 30.

No architecture is so haughty as that which is simple. Chap. 6, Sec. 73.

He who has the truth at his heart need never fear the want of persuasion on his tongue. Sec. 39 (Infidelitas). Speaking truth is like writing fair, and only comes by practice.

The Seven Lamps of Architecture.

Chap. 2, Sec. 1.

Among the first habits that a young architect should learn, is that of thinking in shadow.

Chap. 3, Sec. 13.

It is the very temple of discomfort, and the only charity that the builder can extend to us is to show us, plainly as may be, how soonest to escape from it. [This refers to the architecture of railway stations.]

Chap. 4, Sec. 21.

That treacherous phantom which men call Liberty. Chap. 7, Sec. 1.

The greatest efforts of the race have always been traceable to the love of praise, as its greatest catastrophes to the love of pleasure. Seame and Lilles. Sec. 1, 3.

Nothing is ever done beautifully which is done in rivalship, nor nobly which is done in pride.

Ethics of the Dust.

A little group of wise hearts is better than a wilderness of fools.

Crown of Wild Olive. War, 114.

The Two Paths. Lecture 2.

Fine Art is that in which the hand, the head, and the heart of man go together. Ib.

No human being, however great, or powerful, was ever so free as a fish.

Lecture 5.

You may either win your peace or buy it: win it, by resistance to evil; buy it, by compromise with evil.

God never imposes a duty without giving time to do it.

Lectures on Architecture. No. 2.

Our respect for the dead, when they are just dead, is something wonderful, and the way we show it more wonderful still.

Thank you, pretty cow, that made Pleasant milk to soak my bread.

The Cow. (By Ann T.)

Oh, how very thankful I always should be, That I have kind parents to watch over me, Who teach me from wickedness ever to flee! Poor Children,

Sweet innocent, the mother cried, And started from her nook,

That horrid fly is put to hide The sharpness of the hook.

The Little Fish that would not do as it was bid.

Though man a thinking being is defined, Few use the great prerogative of mind. How few think justly of the thinking few! How many never think, who think they do!

*"He that runs may read." The inverted form of this text is from Cowper's "Tirocinium." The Septuagint text is:—

öπως διώκη ὁ ἀναγινώσκων αὐτά.

This has been alleged to mean "That he that reads may make haste to escape." But Jerome interpreted the passage as meaning that the writing was to be so plain that the reader might run and not be impeded from reading by his speed. Grotius considered it to mean "that it was to be so written that the reader should be quick in comprehending it"; or able to read it easily. The R.C. translation from the Vulgate ("Ut percurrat qui legeriteum"), gives the passage: "That he that readeth it may run over it."

These lines are said to have been written by Mary Queen of Scots, with a diamond, on a window in Fotheringay Castle.

And when the pipe is foul within, Think how the soul's defiled with sin; To purge with fire it does require,

Thus think, and drink tobacco.

From a MS. of early part of 17th century, signed "G. W.," and sometimes attributed to George Wither. The poem was first published in 1831, in "The Soule's Solace," by Thos. Jenner.

There are many subsequent editions, varying materially in the text.

The authorship of these lines—often quoted with slight variations—has hitherto defied all efforts at identification. They are usually credited to R. L. Stevenson, but they are not given in any of his published works, and Mr. Lloyd Osbourne—his stepson and literary executor—informs us that so far as he knows R. L. S. was not the author. "The Reader," of Sept. 7, 1907, gives them to Governor Hoch of Kansas, but in answer to a query Governor Hoch writes: "I regret to say that I am not the author of the verse you quote, though I have been widely credited with it—a great honour." They have also been assigned to the Hon. Mrs. Felkin (Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler—who writes that they are not hers), to Elbert Hubbard, and to Joaquin Miller.

So she went into the garden to cut a cabbage leaf, to make an apple-pie; and at the same time a great she-bear, coming up the street, pops its head into the shop. "What! no soap?" So he died, and she very imprudently married the barber; and there were present the Picninnies, and the Jobililies, and the Garyulies, and the grand Panjandrum himself, with the little round button at top; and they all fell to playing the game of catch as catch can, till the gunpowder ran out at the heels of their boots.

Printed in this form in Miss Edgeworth's "Harry and Lucy, Concluded," Vol. 2, p. 155 (1825). According to Miss Edgeworth, the story was by "Mr. Foote."

According to a writer on "Samuel Foote" in the Quarterly Review, No. 190, Sept., 1854, these lines were produced by Samuel Foote (1720-1777) at a lecture given by Chas. Mackin (1807?-1797), in which he stated that he had brought his own memory to such perfection that he could learn anything by rote on once hearing it. Foote's sentences were handed to Macklin at the end of the lecture, with a request that he would read them and afterwards repeat them from memory. Macklin lectured in 1754.

According to a correspondent of Notes and Queries (Nov. 16, 1850), the author of "The Incoherent Story" was James Quin, the actor (1698-1766), who is said to have laid Foote a wager that he could speak some nonsense which Foote could not repeat off-hand after him. The version given is rather different from the above. The various memoirs of Foote, Quin, and Macklin contain no references to the story.

There is an older and longer story, entitled "Sir Gammer Vans," which may have suggested the above. The following extract will show its resemblance to "The Incoherent Story":—

"Last Sunday morning, at six o'clock in the evening, as I was sailing over the tops of the mountains in my little boat, I met two men on horseback riding on one mare. So

SAYINGS OF THEMISTOCLES (B.C. c. 512-c. 449).

The day after the fair.

This seems connected with the fable of Themistocles, who silenced an officer who desired to claim superior fame for his exploits, by telling a fable of a dispute between the Feast and the Day after the Feast. latter claimed to be more important as being "full of bustle and trouble." "You say right," said the Feast, "but if it had not been for me where would you have been?"

The wildest colts make the best horses, Plutarch: Life of Themistocles.

Teach me the art of forgetting; for I often remember what I would not, and cannot forget what I would.

Saying of Themistocles, as recorded by Cicero.

I never learned how to tune a harp, or play upon a lute; but I know how to raise a small and inconsiderable city to glory and greatness.

> On being taunted with his want of social accomplishments. (Plutarch's Life.)

Themistocles told the Adrians that he brought two gods with him, Persuasion and Force. They replied: "We also, have two gods on our side, Poverty and Despair."

Cæsar's wife must be above suspicion.

Julius Cæsar (B.C. 100-44) divorced his wife Pompeia, but declared at the trial that he knew nothing of what was alleged against her and Clodius. When asked why, in that case, he had divorced her, he replied: "Because I would have the chastity of my wife clear even of suspicion."—Plutarch: Life of Julius Cæsar.

As to Cæsar, when he was called upon, he give no testimony against Clodius, nor did he affirm that he was certain of any injury done to his bed. He only said, "He had divorced Pompeia because the wife of Cæsar ought not only to be clear of such a crime, but of the very suspicion of it."—Plutarch: Life of Cicero.

Passing the Rubicon.

When he arrived at the banks of the Rubicon, which divides Cisalpine Gaul from the rest of Italy . . he stopped to deliberate. . . At last he cried out "The die is cast" and immediately passed the river.—

Plutarch: Life of Julius Casar.

We shall meet at Philippi.

"Thou shalt see me at Philippi," was the remark of the spectre which appeared to Brutus in his tent at Abydos [B.C. 42]. Brutus answered boldly: "I will meet thee there." At Philippi the spectre reappeared, and Brutus, after being defeated, died upon his own sword.*—Plutarch: Life of Casar.

Killed by physicians.

Adrian the Emperor (A.D. 76-117) exclaimed incessantly, when dying, "That the crowd of physicians had killed him." (See Montaigne, Book 2, chap. 37. Montaigne also cites the statement of a Lacedemonian, when asked how he had preserved his life so long: "By my ignorance of medicine.")

A project fit only for a nation of shop-keepers.—Adam Smith: "Weatth of Nations" (1775), Vol. 2, book 4, chap. 7, pt. 3.
Also attributed to Samuel Adams,

American statesman (1776.)

What is true of a shopkeeper is true of a shop-keeping nation.—Dean Tucker (1766). We are indeed, a nation of shopkeepers.— B. Disraeli: "The Young Duke" (1831), Book 1, chap. 11.

Hearts of oak.

Yonkers that have hearts of oake at fourscore yeares .- Old Meg of Herefordshire, 1609. "Where are the rough brave Britons to be found With Hearts of Oak, so much of old renowned?"

—Epilogue to Mrs. Centlivre's "Cruel Gift," 1717. Petticoat government.

There was one species of despotism under which he had long groaned, and that was petticoat government. — Washington Irving "Rip Van Winkle" (1820).

Our friend the enemy.

This perhaps originated with the French expression often used when the allies entered Paris (1814): "Nos amis, nos ennemis."

"English as she is spoke."

Title of a reprint of the English version of P. Carolino's "Guide of the Conversation in Portuguese and English," 1882. The title was due to the publisher, Mr. Tuer.

"The spoils to the victors." The "watchword of corruption," attributed to Andrew Jackson.

Bag and baggage.

Richard Huloet's "Abecedarium Anglico-Latinum pro Tyrunculas," (1552).

The Vicar of Bray will be Vicar of Bray still.

"Fuller's Collection of Proverbs," 1732. According to Fuller's Worthies of Berkshire, a Vicar of Bray, in that county was alternately Romish and Protestant under Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth. The centenarian Parr had similar principles. "He held it safer to be of the religion of the King or Queen that were in being, for he knew that he came raw into the world, and accounted it no point of wisdom to be broiled out of it."—John Taylor (Water poet), "The Old, Old, very Old Man," 1635.

The Man in the Street.

Expression used by Emerson, "Conduct of Life-Worship" and elsewhere.

A proverb describes proverbs as being "the wisdom of the street."

Going the whole hog.

(Hence in more recent times "wholehoggers.")

Said to be connected with the slang "hog," a word meaning at different periods one shilling and five shillings. "Hoger" is Jewish-German for ducat. A correspondent of Notes and Queries (Sept. 27, 1851) ascribes an Irish origin to the expression, stating that in Ireland a shilling was called a hog.

Let them stew in their own grease.

A saying in use at the time of the Franco-German war, imported from Germany.

The lungs of London [i.e. the parks]

Said to have been used by Mr. Windham in a speech delivered before 1814. See also Chas. Dickens (p. 110).

"Bang went saxpence."

Peebles Body (to Townsman supposed to be in London): E-eh, Mac! ye're sune hame again.— Mac: E-ch, it's just a ruinous place that!
Mun, a had na' been there abune twa hoours,
when—Bang—went—Saxpence.
Punch joke, illustrated by Chas, Keene,
Dec. 5, 1868. Said to have been communicated to Keene by Birket Foster, who had the story from Sir John Gilbert.

Masterly inactivity.

According to a correspondent in Notes and Queries (Nov. 29, 1879) this phrase was coined by Sir James Mackintosh (1765-1832). Vindiciæ Gallicæ (1791). It is a parallel phrase with Horace's "strenua inertia" (1 Epl. 11, 28).

Present company excepted.

This expression occurs in "The London Hermit" (by O'Keefe) (1793). Probably of earlier occurrence.

Good manners to except my Lord Mayor of London. - Ray's Proverbs.

A draught on Aldgate Pump. Stated by Fielding in his " Essay on the the Character of Men," to be, "a mercantile phrase for a bad note.

The girl I left behind me. Song ascribed to the year 1759.

The roaring forties.

The rough part of the Atlantic between 40° and 50° N. latitude. Sometimes called "the rolling forties," and also applied to that part of the Southern Ocean between 40° and 50° S.

I heard the little bird say so. Swift. Letter to Stella, May 23, 1711.

"A good bedside manner."

This phrase originated in Punch, March 15, 1884, in the letterpress accompanying a drawing by G. Du Maurier: "What sort of a doctor is he?" "Well, I don't know much about his ability; but he's got a very good bedside manner.

Lying like gas-meters.

Said to have originated in Dec., 1897, in a case at Southwark Police Court.

Not lost but gone before.

Title of a song published in Smith's "Edinburgh Harmony," 1829.

"Non amittuntur sed præmittuntur." (They are not lost but sent before.)—Seneca.

Hoping against hope.

Founded upon Romans 4, 18.

Macaulay's Schoolbov.

The frequency of Macaulay's reference to somewhat abstruse matters as subjects which any public schoolboy would know, has led to his being credited with the phrase. It is to be found, however, in many earlier authors, e.g.: "Every schoolboy hath that famous testament of Grunnius Corocotta Porcellus at his fingers ends." — R. Burton: "Anat. Melan." (1621), Part 3, sec. 1, mem. 1, 1. See also Swift:

"Oh how our neighbour lifts his nose, To tell what every schoolboy knows.

The Fourth Estate.

The "three estates of the realm" are the Lords Spiritual, The Lords Temporal, and the Commons. "Ane pleasant satyre of the Three Estatis" was a play by Sir David Lindsay, produced in 1535. The Newspaper Press, owing to its greatly enhanced influence and power, became known as "The Fourth Estate" about the end of the 18th century. Burke is credited with having invented the term, but it does not appear in his published works.

In Rabelais's "Pantagruel," when Pantagruel visits the island of the Papimanes, he is net by four persons, a monk, a falconer, a lawyer, and a husbandman, and is told that they are "les quatre estatz de l'isle" (the four estates of the island.) (Book 4, chap. 48).

Culture is the passion for sweetness and light, and (what is more) the passion for making them prevail.

Matthew Arnold.

The phrase "sweetness and light" was used by Dean Swift ("Battle of the Books," 1697) in an imaginary fable by Æsop as to the merits of the bee (the ancients) and the spider (the moderns). It concludes: "The difference is that instead of dirt and poison, we have rather chosen to fill our hives with honey and wax, thus furnishing mankind with the two noblest of things, which are sweetness and light."

4.—HISTORICAL AND TRADITIONAL.

"Thou hast conquered, O Nazarene," or, according to others, "Be content, O Nazarene."

Ascribed to Julian the Apostate, when at the point of death, in Persia, A.D. 363. (See Montaigne " Essais." 1580. book 2, chap. 19; also Swinburne: "Thou hast conquered, O pale Galilean," p. 354).

There, but for the grace of God, goes John Bradford.

Tradition ascribes this to John Bradford (b. 1510; burnt at Smithfield 1555) on seeing some criminals going to execution. (See "Nat. D.ct. Biog.")

The English take their pleasures sadly.

"Ils s'amusaient tristement selon la coutume

"Has amusatent wisterness et al. a containe de leur pays," said Froissart. — Emerson's "English Traits," chap. 8.
"They" [the English], says Froissart, "amused themselves sadly after the fashion of their country"—"ils se rejouissoient fristenent selon la coutume de leur pays."—Hazlitt, "Sketches and Essays: Merry England."

The passage is not found in Froissart, but it seems to be derived from the Duc de Sully's "Memoirs," written c. 1630, as follows: "Les Anglais s'amusent tristement selon l'u-age de leur pays." There is a mediaval Latin pro-verb, "Anglica gens est optima flens et pes-sima idens." (The English race is the best at weeping and the worst at laughing.) On the other hand, there is an early tribute to the jovial disposition of Englishmen: "The whole Inights in nation, beyond all other mortal men, is most given to banquetting and feasts."—Trans. (by Burton, "Anat. Melan," 1621) from Paulus Jovius (1453–1552), "Hist.," Book 11.

A certain man has called us, "of all peoples the wisest in action"; but he added, "the stupidest in speech."—Carlyle, on "The Nigger Question" (1849). [English] nation, beyond all other mortal men, Froth at top, dregs at bottom, but the middle excellent.

Voltaire's Description of the English Nation.

A great leap in the dark

Thomas Hobbes, b. 1588, d. 1679, author of "Leviathan," when about to die, is reported to have said, "Now I am about to take my last voyage, a great leap in the dark." Hence the expression, "Hobbes voyage," Vanbrugh uses in the "The Provoked Wife" (1679), as referring to matrimony.

What has posterity done for us?

Erroneously attributed to Sir Boyle Roche (1743-1807) in a speech in the House of Commons; but the words occur in John Trumbull's "McFingal," canto 2 (1776). Mrs. Elizabeth Montagu, in a letter dated Jan. 1, 1742, has this allusion: "The man was laughed at as a blunderer who said in a public business, 'We do much for posterity;' I would fain see them do something for us.'"

The King of France, with twenty thousand

Went up the hill, and then came down again. Old Tarlton's Song. (Tarlton died 1588.) Halliwell, in his "Nursery Rhymes," gives four versions of these lines, including one from a Sloane MS., temp. Chas. I.

And have they fixed the where, and when? And shall Trelawny die?

Then twenty thousand Cornish men Shall know the reason why!

Trelawny. (Song written at the time of the committal of Trelawny, Bishop of Bristol, to the Tower, 1688.)

All my eye and Betty Martin.

The older form is said to be, "All my eye, Betty Martin." (The tradition that "Betty Martin" is a survival of a mediaval invoca-tion, "Beate Martine," is discredited.)

The sun never sets in the Spanish dominions.

Quoted, as a saying of Spanish soldiers, by Capt. John Smith, 1579-1631.*

^{*} Also mentioned in Gage's "New Survey of the West Indies," 1648, as applicable to the Dutch as well as the Spaniards.

It may be well to wait a century for a reader, as God has waited six thousand years for an observer.

John Kepler (1571-1630).

If the Almighty God waited 6,000 years for one to see what he had made, I may surely wait 200 for one to understand what I have seen."—Carlyle (referring to Kepler); "Miscellanies" (Voltaire), 1829.

England expects every officer and man to do his duty this day.

Nelson's Signal, Oct. 26, 1805, as published in "The Times," Dec. 26, 1805.
Usually quoted as "England expects every man to do his duty."

Victory! or Westminster Abbey! Lord Nelson (1758-1805) on boarding the " San Carlo."

"Victory, or else a grave."—Shakespeare, Henry VI., Part 3, Act 2, 2.

Every bullet has its billet.

Saying attributed to William III.

Sufficeth this to prove my theme withal,

That every bullet hath a lighting place. — Cascoigne, "Fruits of War." King William was of an opinion, an please your Honour, quoth Trim, that everything was predestined for us in this world; insomuch that he would often say to his soldiers that "every ball had its billet."—Sterne, "Tristram Shandy" (1759-1760), Vol. 8, ch. 19.

The Army and Navy for ever,

Three cheers for the Red, White, and Blue.

The Red, White, and Blue.

Song originating at the time of the Crimean war, and said to indicate the co-operation of redcoats and bluejackets.

No soldier can fight unless he is properly fed on beef and beer.

Attributed to the Duke of Marlborough. A similar saying, "An army, like a serpent, goes on its belly," has been attributed to Frederick the Great.

"Soldiers, we must never be beat,-what will they say in England?"

Remark by the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo.

The thin red line.

Article in "The Times," describing the Highlanders drawn up at Balaclava or Inkerman.

"Up, Guards! and at 'em."

Ascribed to Wellington. His real words, according to his biographer, Sir Herbert Maxwell, were, "Stand up, Guards."

He never would believe that Providence had sent a few men into the world, ready booted and spurred to ride, and millions ready saddled and bridled to be ridden.

Saying of Richard Rumbold, at his execu-tion, 1685, as recorded by Lord Macaulay (History of England, Chap. 5).

All quiet along the Potomac.

Proverbial saying in America. Supposed to have originated in a report by General G. B. McLellan, U.S. (1826-1885).

Go West, young man! Go West. John L. B. Soule, in the "Terre Haute Express " (1851).

Be sure you are right. Then go ahead. David Crockett, U.S. (1786-1836).

Hold the fort! I am coming!
Signal to General Corse, in Allatoona
(Oct. 5, 1864), by William F. Sherman (1820-1891).

The religion of all men of sense.

The Earl [Shaftesbury] said at last...

"Men of sense are really but of one religion."
Upon which says the lady, of a sudden,
"Pray, my lord, what religion is that which men of sense agree in?" "Madam," says the earl, "men of sense never tell it."—Note by Speaker Onslow, to Burnet's notice of the Earl of Shaftesbury, "History of his own Times," Vol. 1.*

A similar anedote is told of Samuel

A similar anecdote is told of Samuel Rogers in Froude's "Short Studies on Great Subjects"—"A plea for the Free Dis-cussion of Theological Difficulties"—no doubt a confusion of memory on Froude's part. The story is also told of Benjamin Disraeli, but this is due probably to his having put it into the mouth of Waldershare in his novel "Endymion."

Lord Chatham, with his sword undrawn, Is waiting for Sir Richard Strachan; Sir Richard, longing to be at 'em, Is waiting for the Earl of Chatham.

Epigram said to have appeared in the "Morning Chronicle" (1809).

The reference is to the recriminations following the failure of the military operations of John Pitt, second Earl of Chatham, in the expedition to Walcheren, 1809. He attributed his own fatal delays to the dilatoriness of Admiral Sir Richard Strachan, who retaliated that the Earl was unpunctual in fulfilling his arrangements, and nicknamed him "the late Earl of Chatham." Another version (given in the "Nat. Dict. Biog.") is: Great Chatham, with his sabre drawn,

Stood waiting for Sir Richard Strachan; Sir Richard, longing to be at 'em, Stood waiting for the Earl of Chatham.

You may prove anything by figures.
Stated by Carlyle to be the saying of "a witty statesman." Chartism No. 2.

All evil comes from Spain; all good from the north.

According to Sir T. Challoner, writing from Florence, 1597, this was then "a common proverb in every man's mouth," (Notes and Queries, 10th Ser., Vol. 2, 23).

Never was Legate or Cardinal that did good in England.

Referred to by Hall ("Chronicle," 16th century) as being an "olde sawe" in the time of Henry VIII.

With how little wisdom the world is governed!

"Thou little thinkest what a little foolery governs the whole world," A saying ascribed to "a wise Pope" in Selden's "Table Talk" (see p. 275); also to the Swedish Chancellor Oxenstierna; also told in connection with Conrad van Benningen, the Dutch statesman (1643). Lord Chatham, in a letter to Lord Shelburne (Jan. 25, 1775), writes of the expression as "the saying of one of the Popes—Alexander VI., Jules, or Leo—to a son of his."

5.—POLITICAL PHRASES.

Drifting into war.

Expression used by the Earl of Clarendon, 1608-1674.

Every man has his price.

Ascribed to Sir Robert Walpole, Earl of Orford (1676-1745). His nephew, Horace Walpole, in a letter dated Aug. 26, 1785, says it was a maxim ascribed to Sir Robert "by his enemies."

Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform.

Party is the madness of many for the gain of a few.

Attributed to Pope and also to Swift.
Pope is probably the author. Published in "Miscellanies: Thoughts on Various Subjects" (1786).

Peace with honour.

Expression used by Lord Beaconsfield on his return from the Berlin Congress on the Eastern Question, July 1878

Eastern Question, July, 1878.

He had rather spend £10,000 on Embassies to keep or procure peace with dishonour, than £10,000 on an army that would have forced peace with honour.—Sir Anthony Weldon, "The Court and Character of King James," 1650.

Register! Register! Register!

From a speech by Sir Robt. Peel at a "civic festival" (c. 1835). ("Ay, register, register, register, said the Duke. "Those were immortal words." "I can tell your Grace three far better ones," said Mr. Tadpole, with a self-complacent air. "Object, object, object!"—B. Disraeli: "Coningsby" Book 2, chap. 2.)

Policy of pin-pricks.

This is from the French expression "coups d'epingle" which seems to have been classical as early as the middle of the 18th century.

Defence not defiance.

Motto of the Volunteer Movement (c. 1852.) "An attitude not only of defence, but defiance."—Prof. Thos. Gillespie: "The Mountain Storm."

Three acres and a cow.

An expression often attributed to the Right Hon. Jesse Collings, M.P. (b. 1831), who carried the Small Holdings amendment against Lord Salisbury's Government in 1886.

—John Stuart Mill ("Principles of Political Economy," 1848, Book 2, chap. 6, sec. 5), referring to peasant-farming in Flanders, wrote: "When the land is cultivated entirely by the spade, and no horses are kept, a cow is kept for every three acres of land."

The classes and the masses.

A phrase used by Mr. Gladstone.

"This new rage for rhyming badly, Which late hath seized all ranks and classes, Down to that new estate 'the masses.'"

"The Fudges in England," (1835). Letter 4. T. Moore.

The Duty of an Opposition is to oppose. Quoted by Lord Randolph Churchill.

When I first came into Parliament, Mr. Tierney, a great Whig authority, used always to say that the duty of an Opposition was very simple—it was to oppose everything and propose nothing.—Lord Stanley: Hansard's Parliamentary Debates, June 4, 1841.

Are we downhearted? No!

This expression, which came into vogue in England towards the close of the General Election of Jan, 1906, seems to have originated in a speech by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain at Smethwick, Jan. 15, 1906, in which he said: "We are not downhearted, but we cannot understand what is happening to our neighbours."

Terminological inexactitude.

"It [Chinese Labour in South Africa] could not, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, be classified as slavery in the extreme acceptance of the word without some risk of terminological inexactitude."—Mr. Winston Churchill in the British House of Commons, Feb. 22, 1906. ("Times" report.)

6.—FORENSIC.

Corporations have no souls.

Lord Chancellor Thurlow said that the corporations have neither bodies to be punished nor souls to be damned; they therefore do as they like.—Poynder's "Literary Extracts."

"They [corporations] feel neither shame,

"They [corporations] feel neither shame, remorse, gratitude, nor goodwill."—Hazlitt: "Table Talks," Essay 27.

The glorious uncertainty of the law.

Alleged to have originated in a toast at a legal dinner, 1756.

The law of England is the greatest grievance of the nation, very expensive and dilatory.
